Concept Design Report

Background

The project expectations are a lavish yet low key modern house for a very important client in the area. The house must not be too flashy as to draw attention. The client wants a house that is comfortable for him to have a very private life and is simplistic. We will use common building materials and build in a part of town that is secluded and calm.

Design Concept

The type of house to be built is a modern house that has a feeling of luxury on the inside but isn't too extravagant on the outside. The function of the house is to house the client comfortably without drawing too much attention from others. The textures and colors used are to complement the surrounding environment in the state of New Mexico.

The house will be located in a secluded area in Albuquerque, New Mexico. The reasoning for this is that the client wants to not be bothered by people, but he wants to stay close to his family.

Components of the Project

- 7 rooms

Project Description

Exterior View

This view shows the main exterior elements of the house. The roof is made of the same material as the driveway which is black asphalt. A large in ground pool is located in the backyard. The exterior walls are made of a dark gray tile. The front of the house has a distinct dark wood panel for a more modern feel. The two exterior doors are a maroon color with a glass pane.

Interior View

The interior view shows the mainly wooden floorplan. The coloring scheme for the walls was chosen to go nicely with the feel of a desert. The bathroom has black and white tiles. There are multiple windows to view the beautiful surroundings.
