

Artist's Statement

Once upon a time many moons ago my life was plain and average colored in the duller grays and blacks. Then a blossoming life within in my womb was born and painted the land and skies for me, not too long after I was blessed with another graceful gift from above. These two girls have given me an insight into the world that I could never before have imagined. It is through them that I have grown into the mature young woman that people see today. The love I share with my husband and that binds our family is the basis for all of the work I create. It is their support and affection that has allowed me to see beyond myself into something greater, this in turn has reflected itself in my art and writing.

I consider my best work to be my writing, but it is also some of my most complex work and there is little to none of this website as it is still a work in process. However, I love to find ways to put my darling angels into ever memorable scrapbooking pages. Scrapbooking, which is sometimes thought to be a hobby for lonely housewives, is really a way of showing photo essays. My environment has created the need to keep my scrapbooking digital, but luckily this allows me greater versatility in what I can achieve.

I have discovered two sides to my work. There is the reflective and philosophical writing where I am able to place my world into concrete words. It is through language that I can express the colors and shapes that dominate my mind and soul. Then there is the emotional digital work that allows me to express the sensations that brush my heart through images. Expression through artwork has made several things blatantly obvious to me. First, while our world is written in codes of math we as a species are written in a far different and seemingly rare language; a language that sees that math through expression and not numbers, a language that puts enormous emphasis on the meaning and not the words. Second, we as individuals are layered and complex creatures that must constantly define ourselves so that we can stay grounded in all of the chaos. I use art as the medium for my expression, what is yours?
