Old Frackville Tales

Lorraine Stanton

When Mr. and Mrs. Robert Keating of 26 South Street came home from a trip to New York, they found some old books in the attic that dated back to the early 1800s. They decided to sell them at a garage sale, and I was interested in buying a few of them.

The books were a collection of 19th-century novels, including such classics as "Wuthering Heights" by Emily Brontë and "Pride and Prejudice" by Jane Austen. They also contained a few old maps and a manuscript letter from the early 1800s.

Though the books were in rough condition, I was thrilled to have the opportunity to read them. They provided a glimpse into the past and helped me understand the world as it was then.
